Gil Blas, states that a few weeks ago Lord Lytton intimated to the Marquis de Breteuil that he would like to meet General Boulanger, " without specifying whether he was actuated b mere curiosity, political considerations, or a feeling of personal sympathy." A quiet dinner party was arranged by M. de Breteuil. Gil-Blaz-added, that subsequently General Brugere, M. Carnot's secretary, happening to meet Lord Lytton at a diplomatic reception, thought it right to remonstrate with his lord ship on the subject. The latter replied, "Pardon me, but does this reprimand come from yourself personally, or have you been instructed to that effect by the President of the Republic? In that case, I should like to know why the President does not formulate his complaint through the regular channel." General Brugère protested that he spoke only in his own name. "I am quite persuaded it must be so," the Ambassador replied, "for in London your representative. M. Waddington, is in no way interfered with if he chooses to meet at dinner Mr. Gladstone or any other member of the Opposition." The Siècle adds:-"It will be understood that General Brugere desires to maintain the utmost reserve on this subject, and should be the last man to talk about an incident as to which the last word has not been said, but which, as set forth above, is altogether inaccorate."
